2011 Ruth Byrne Historic Preservation Award. Each year the Glendale City Council presents the 2011 Ruth Byrne Historic Preservation Award during the month of May to coincide with National Historic Preservation Month. After careful review and evaluation, the Historic Preservation Commission selected the Thunderbird Tower Restoration Project Committee and the Thunderbird Community as the 2011 award recipient. This award is being presented in recognition of their hard work in restoring the Thunderbird Control Tower building on the campus of the Thunderbird School of Global Management

For 60 years, the tower has been the icon of the school grounds at 59th Ave. and Greenway Rd. It was built in 1941, and served as the air control tower and officers' quarters during the operation of the Thunderbird 1 Army Air Field, where American, British, Canadian, and Chinese pilots trained during World War II. It was designed to resemble a Thunderbird, based on the Indian God of Thunder.

In January 2006, the tower closed due to structural issues. In the fall of 2007, a student-led task force initiated a project to restore the Tower. Andrew Burman, Will Counts, and Rebecca Mitchell spearheaded the project and started a vigorous campaign to raise money for the restoration.

The tower dedication celebration will be held in conjunction with Thunderbird's 2011 homecoming activities on November 11, 2011. The Ruth Byrne Historic Preservation Award was established in 1996. The purpose of the award is to recognize individuals or organizations that have made significant contributions to the preservation of Glendale's historic and cultural resources. This prestigious award is named after Ruth Byrne, a Glendale native, in honor of her dedicated work and ongoing efforts to preserve Glendale's history. Glendale's Intelligent Transportation System Strategic Plan. Traffic will move more smoothly in Glendale thanks to impending upgrades to the city's Intelligent Transportation System (ITS). In addition, the Transportation Department will develop a strategic plan that will set priorities for Glendale's transportation communications and management system.

A big component of this process is the strategic plan for the ITS, which will not only establish priorities, but address questions such as:

- What will communications look like moving forward?
- Is there better technology we should be using?
- How can we manage traffic more effectively?

Glendale did not previously have a strategic plan for the city as a whole, only a partial plan for the Sports and Entertainment District; now this plan will address the needs of the entire city and how Glendale fits into the region.

System upgrades that are beginning to be designed are fiber optic cable and conduit, and closed-circuit television cameras on Cactus Road, between 59th and 67th avenues, as well as Thunderbird and Greenway roads, between 51st and 67th avenues. The same ITS infrastructure will be designed along Peoria Avenue between 43rd and 67th avenues. These upgrades will allow communication with the main ITS infrastructure along 59th Avenue.

Finally, another system upgrade involves dynamic messaging signs planned at four entry points into downtown Glendale, designed to provide traffic alerts for downtown events that may cause delays or other traffic restrictions. Similar message signs are currently in use in the Sports and Entertainment District, and are expected to be just as effective for the downtown area.

Each of these projects is in its beginning stage and each has a different estimated completion date. The projects are 100-percent federally funded and administered through the Arizona Department of Transportation.
